Good Evening!

BY BIDE DUDLEY

The sun is slowly sinking in they west.

The clouds are brightly tinted -bet your life! And gracefully they rest on Nature's breast; The rooster, calm, is speaking to his wife,

A vagrant ray of light comes breaking through The trees that serve as hair on yonder hills,

And mother cautions Dad, as mothers do. 'Tis time for him to take his liver pills.

The birds dart here and there, en route to sleep, And waking frogs are tuning up their song. While in the valleys low we see the sheep

Assuring little lambs there's nothing wrong. The sun at last has hid his state-from Tessie. And soon the old maid looks beneath her bed, o'er. "Why. Toady!" said Tessie, Ah, day in dear Arcadia is done

We know it, for the mule now starts to bray. So rise ye up, oh, every mother's

OBSERVATIONS.

Miss Baker refuses to "Say When." -Headline. Not a drinking woman we take it.

Notice to citizens who can't read! You'll have to learn how before you can vote in the fall. Salons for women are advocated in parts of England. Of course, the bars would have big mirrors. Mayor Hylan has proclaimed the week of Oct. 8 as Safety Week. Kindly refrain from getting hurt this week.

New York has a new armored var for the transportation of prisoners.

TAXICAB TESSIE.

-From Agricultural Ballade The Jimtown Bank was in a stone building with iron bars at the windows. Once a robber had attempted to blow it up, but the bomb had missed the building and many people thought it was an auto tire exploding. That the cashier, Ira Prebble, took the whole affair lightly was evidenced by the fact that the next day he went out to the links and broke two clubs playing golf. Therefore, when Tessia approached Constable Brown Sunday night and said she had seen a man prowling about the bank, the officer merely grinned.

"What air you-a detective?" he asked.

"I have intuition," she replied. The Constable called up his wife and asked her to look the word up in the dictionary. Mrs. Brown, however, was knitting socks for the heathen in Africa

POEMS OF PREFERENCE

Mazie G. wants the pair of handpainted shoestrings offered as the prize in this contest. She says her brother, Moo, is to have a birthday soon and she wants to make him a present of the strings. Her poem follows:

I want to wed a saller Who sails from port to port, Aboard a great big whater, A sailor who's a sport-

Who'll save up all the money He earns from other men And give it to his honey. Then sail away again.

and refused to be bothered. Tessie was a girl with real nerve. Approaching the bank with her revolver in her hand she called:

"Who's there?" "I am," replied the man, who was a robber of much experience.

"What are you doing?" "I am trying to rob this bank. What did you think I was doiug?" "Now, don't get fresh." This

The girl rushed up to the robber and yanked off his false whiskers. He proved to be Toady Allen, the handsome yegg.

"I'm ashamed of you." Constable Brown stepped up. "They's a dance over at Skinner's Hall," he said to Tessie.

What say we drop in and have a little fun?" But Tessle refused. It all seemed so absurd. (To be continued).

Special Announcement!

Jefferson Shrewsbury Nutt. special correspondent of this column, and his wife, Jessica Plympton Nutt, are the parents of a new boy, whom they have named Filbert. The baby has been given a pretty silver spoon marked "Savoy Hotel" by his grandfather, Wall Nutt.

Doolittle's Latest.

Eilabelle Mae Doolittle, the noted poetess of Leesville, was disgusted recently. A friend called to see her The man in charge is the vanguard, and spent a whole hour reciting her woes. When she had gone, Miss Doolittle took the wrapper off a round steak, which had just been delivered at her home, and wrote the Do not be a complainer, my dear,
